Didst thou
Make us partakers of a little gain;
That now our loss might be ten times as much. Shakefp.
With such she must return at setting light,
Tho' not partaker, witness of their night. Prior.
His bitterest enemies were partakers of his kindness, and he still continued to entreat them to accept of life from him, and, with tears of compassion, bewailed their infidelity.
Calamy's Sermons.
2. Sometimes with in before the thing partaken.
With me partaker in thy happiness,
When thou dost meet good hap. Shakefp.
If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets.
Matthew xxiii. 30.
3. Accomplish; associate.
Thou contentedst, and hast been partaker with adulterers.
He took upon him the person of the duke of York, and drew with him complices and partakers. Bacon.
PARTER. n. f. [from part.] One that parts or separates.
The chief partier of the fray was night, which, with her black arms, pulled their malicious fights one from the other.
Sidney.
PARTERRE. n. f. [partierre, Fr.] A level division of ground, that, for the most part, faces the fourth and best front of an house, and is generally furnished with greens, flowers, &c.
Miller.
There are as many kinds of gardening, as of poetry; your makers of parterres and flower gardens are epigrammatists and
The vast parterres a thousand hands shall make;
Lo! Cobham comes, and floats them with a lake. Pope.
PARTIAL. adj. [partial, French.]
1. Inclined antecedently to favour one party in a cause, or one side of the question more than the other.
Ye have not kept my ways, but have been partial in the law. Mal. ii. 9.
2. Inclined to favour without reason.
Self-love will make men partial to themselves and friends, and ill nature, passion, and revenge will carry them too far in punishing others; and hence, God hath appointed governments to restrain the partiality and violence of men. Locke.
Authors are partial to their wit, 'tis true,
But are not critics to their judgment too. Pope.
In these, one may be sincerer to a reasonable friend, than to a fond and partial parent. Pope.
3. Affecting only one part; subsisting only in a part; not general; not universal; not total.
If we compare these partial dissolutions of the earth with an universal dissolution, we may as easily conceive an universal deluge from an universal dissolution, as a partial deluge from a partial. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
That which weakens religion, will at length destroy it; for the weakening of a thing is only a partial destruction of
it. South's Sermons.
All discord, harmony, not understood;
All partial evil, universal good. Pope.
PARTIALITY. n. f. [partialité, Fr. from partial.] Unequal state of the judgment and favour of one above the other, without just reason.
Then would the Irish party cry out partiality, and complain he is not used as a subject, he is not suffered to have the free benefit of the law. Spenser on Ireland.
Partiality is properly the understanding's judging according to the inclination of the will and affections, and not according to the exact truth of things, or the merits of the cause. South.
As there is a partiality to opinions, which is apt to mislead the understanding; so there is also a partiality to studies, which is prejudicial to knowledge. Locke.
TO PARTIALIZE. v. a. [partialiser, Fr. from partial.] To make partial. A word, perhaps, peculiar to Shakespeare, and not unworthy of general use.
Such neighbour-neariness to our sacred blood
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
Th' unflinching firmness of my upright soul. Shakefp.
PARTIALLY. adv. [from partial.]
1. With unjust favour or dislike.
2. In part; not totally.
That stole into a total verity, which was but partially true in its covert sense. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The message he brought, opened a clear prospect of eternal salvation, which had been but obscurely and partially figured in the shadows of the law. Rogers's Sermons.
PARTIBILITY. n. f. [from partible.] Divisibility; separability.
PARTIBLE. adj. [from part.] Divisible; separable.
Make the moulds partible, glued or cemented together, that you may open them, when you take out the fruit. Bacon.
The same body, in one circumstance, is more weighty,
and, in another, is more partible. Digby on the Soul.
PARTICIPABLE. adj. [from participate.] Such as may be shared or partaken.

PAR

Plato, by his ideas, means only the divine essence with this connotation, as it is variously imitable or participable by created beings. Norris's Miscellanies.
PARTICIPANT. adj. [participant, Fr. from participate.] Sharing; having share or part.
During the parliament, he published his proclamation, offering pardon to all such as had taken arms, or been participant of any attempts against him; so as they submitted themselves. Bacon.
The prince saw he should confer with one participant of more than monkish speculations. Watson.
If any part of my body be so mortified, as it becomes like a rotten branch of a tree, it putrefies, and is not participant of influence derived from my soul, because it is now no longer in it to quicken it. Hale.
TO PARTICIPATE. v. n. [participo, Lat. particeps, Fr.]
1. To partake; to have share.
Th' other instruments
Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel;
And mutually participate. Shakefp.
2. With of.
An aged citizen brought forth all his provisions, and said, that as he did communicate unto them his store, to would he participate of their wants. Hayward.
3. With in.
His delivery, and thy joy thereon,
In both which we, as next, participate. Milton.
4. To have part of more things than one.
Few creatures participate of the nature of plants and metals both. Bacon.
God, when heav'n and earth he did create,
Form'd man, who should of both participate. Denham.
Those bodies, which are under a light, which is extended and distributed equally through all, should participate of each others colours. Dryden.
5. To have part of something common with another.
The species of audibles seem to participate more with local motion, like percussions made upon the air. Bacon.
TO PARTICIPATE. v. a. To partake; to receive part of; to share.
As Christ's incarnation and passion can be available to no man's good, which is not made partaker of Christ, neither can we participate him without his presence. Hooker.
The French seldom achieved any honourable acts without Scottish hands, who therefore are to participate the glory with them. Camden's Remains.
Fellowship,
Such as I seek, fit to participate
All rational delight; wherein the brute Cannot be human consort. Milt. Par. Lost.
PARTICIPATION. n. f. [participation, Fr. from participate.]
1. The state of sharing something in common.
Civil society doth more content the nature of man, than any private kind of solitary living; because, in society, this good of mutual participation is so much larger. Hooker.
Their spirits are so married in conjunction, with the participation of society, that they flock together in consent, like so many wild geese. Shakefp. Henry IV.
A joint coronation of himself and his queen might give any countenance of participation of title. Bacon.
2. The act or state of partaking or having part of something.
All things seek the highest, and covet more or less the participation of God himself. Hooker.
Those deities are so by participation, and subordinate to the supreme. Stillington.
What an honour, that God should admit us into such a blessed participation of himself? Atterbury.
Convince them, that brutes have the least participation of thought, and they retract. Bentley's Sermon.
Your genius should mount above that mist, in which its participation and neighbourhood with earth long involved it.
Pope.
3. Distribution; division into shares.
It sufficeth not, that the country hath wherewith to sustain even more than to live upon it, if means be wanting whereby to drive convenient participation of the general store into a great number of well-delivers. Raleigh.
PARTICIPIAL. adj. [participialis, Lat.] Having the nature of a participle.
PARTICIPIALY. adv. [from participial.] In the sense or manner of a participle.
PARTICIPLE. n. f. [participium, Lat.]
1. A word partaking at once the qualities of a noun and verb.
A participle as is a particular sort of adjective, formed from a verb, and together with its signification of action, passion, or some other manner of existence, signifying the time thereof. Clarke's Latin Grammar.
2. Any thing that participates of different things.
The participles or confiners between plants and living creatures, are such as are fixed, though they have a motion in their parts: such as, oysters and cockles. Bacon.
PARTICLE. n. f. [particule, Fr. particula, Lat.]
1. Any small portion of a greater substance. There

PAR

From any of the other unreasonable demands, the houses had not given their commissioners authority in the least partide to recede. Clarendon.
There is not one grain in the universe, either too much or too little, nothing to be added, nothing to be pared; nor so much as any one partide of it, that mankind may not be either the better or the worse for, according as 'tis applied. L'Estr.
With partides of heav'nly fire,
The God of nature did his soul inspire. Dryden.
Curious wits,
With rapture, with astonishment reflect,
On the small size of atoms, which unite
To make the smallest partide of light. Blackmore.
It is not impossible, but that microscopes may, at length, be improved to the discovery of the partides of bodies, on which their colours depend. Newton's Opticks.
Blest with more partides of heav'nly flame. Granville.
2. A word unvaried by inflexion.
Till Arianism had made it a matter of great sharpness and subtlety of wit to be a found believing christian, men were not curious what syllables or partides of speech they used.
Hooker, b. vi.
The Latin varies the signification of verbs and nouns, not as the modern languages, by partides prefixed, but by changing the last syllables. Locke on Education.
Partides are the words, whereby the mind signifies what connection it gives to the several affirmations and negations, that it unites in one continued reasoning or narration. Locke.
In the Hebrew tongue, there is a partide, consisting but of one single letter, of which there are reckoned up above fifty several significations. Locke.
PARTICULAR. adj. [particular, French.]
1. Relating to single persons; not general.
He, as well with general orations, as particular dealing with men of most credit, made them see how necessary it was. Sidney.
As well for particular application to special occasions, as also in other manifold respects, infinite treasures of wisdom are abundantly to be found in the holy scripture. Hooker.
2. Individual; one distinct from others.
Wherefore one plant draweth such a particular juice out of the earth, as it qualifyeth the earth, so as that juice, which remaineth, is fit for the other plant; there the neighbourhood doth good. Bacon.
This is true of actions considered in their general nature or kind, but not considered in their particular individual instances. South's Sermons.
Artists, who propose only the imitation of such a particular person, without election of ideas, have often been reproached for that omission. Dryden.
3. Noting properties or things peculiar.
Of this prince there is little particular memory; only that he was very studious and learned. Bacon.
4. Attentive to things single and distinct.
I have been particular in examining the reason of children's inheriting the property of their fathers, because it will give us farther light in the inheritance of power. Locke.
5. Single; not general.
Rather performing his general commandment, which had ever been, to embrace virtue, than any new particular, sprung out of passion, and contrary to the former. Sidney.
6. Odd; having something that eminently distinguishes him from others. This is commonly used in a sense of contempt.
PARTICULAR. n. f.
1. A single instance; a single point.
I must reserve some particulars, which it is not lawful for me to reveal. Bacon.
Those notions are universal, and what is universal must needs proceed from some universal constant principle; the same in all particulars, which can be nothing else but human nature. South's Sermons.
Having the idea of an elephant or an angle in my mind, the first and natural enquiry is, whether such a thing does exist? and this knowledge is only of particulars. Locke.
And if we will take them, as they were directed, in particular to her, or in her, as their representative, to all other women, they will, at most, concern the female sex only, and import no more but that subjection, they should ordinarily be in, to their husbands. Locke.
The master could hardly sit on his horse for laughing, all the while he was giving me the particulars of this story. Addison.
Vespasian he resembled in many particulars. Swift.
2. Individual; private person.
It is the greatest interest of particulars, to advance the good of the community. L'Estrange.
3. Private interest.
Our wisdom must be such, as doth not propose to itself to destroy our own particulars, the partial and immoderate desire whereof poisoneth wherefore it taketh place; but the scope and mark, which we are to aim at, is the publick and common good. Hooker.
They apply their minds even with hearty affection and zeal, at the least, unto those branches of publick prayer, wherein their own particular is moved. Hooker, b. 5.

His general lov'd him Shakefp.
In a most dear particular.
4. Private character; single self; state of an individual.
For his particular, I'll receive him gladly;
But not one follower. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
5. A minute detail of things singly enumerated.
The reader has a particular of the books, wherein this law was written. Ayliffe's Parergon.
6. Distinct not general recital.
Invention is called a muse, authors ascribe to each of them,
in particular, the sciences which they have invented. Dryden.
PARTICULARITY. n. f. [particularité, Fr. from particular.]
1. Distinct notice or enumeration; not general assertion.
So did the boldness of their affirmation accompany the greatness of what they did affirm, even descending to particularities, what kingdoms he should overcome. Sidney.
2. Singleness; individuality.
Knowledge imprinted in the minds of all men, whereby both general principles for directing of human actions are com-prehended, and conclusions derived from them, upon which conclusions groweth, in particularity, the choice of good and evil. Hooker, b. ii.
3. Petty account; private incident.
To see the titles that were most agreeable to such an emperor, the flatteries that he lay most open to, with the like particularities only to be met with on medals, are certainly not a little pleasing. Addison.
4. Something belonging to single persons.
Let the general trumpet blow his blast;
Particularities and petty founds
To cease. Shakefp. Henry VI.
5. Something peculiar.
I saw an old heathen altar, with this particularity, that it was hollowed like a dish at one end; but not the end on which the sacrifice was laid. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
He applied himself to the coquette's heart; there occurred many particularities in this dissection. Addison.
TO PARTICULARIZE. v. a. [particulariser, Fr. from particular.]
To mention distinctly; to detail; to shew minutely.
The leanness that afflicts us, is an inventory to particularize their abundance. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
He not only boasts of his parentage as an Israelite, but par-ticularizes his descent from Benjamin. Atterbury's Sermons.
PARTICULARLY. v. a. [from particular.]
1. Distinctly; singly; not universally.
Providence, that universally casts its eye over all the creation, is yet pleased more particularly to fasten it upon some.
South's Sermons.
2. In an extraordinary degree.
This exact propriety of Virgil, I particularly regarded as a great part of his character. Dryden.
With the flower and the leaf I was so particularly pleased, both for the invention and the moral, that I commend it to the reader. Dryden.
TO PARTICULATE. v. a. [from particular.] To make mention singly. Obsolete.
I may not particulate of Alexander Hales, the irresragable doctor. Camden's Remains.
PARTISAN. n. f. [partisan, French.]
1. A kind of pike or halberd.
Let us
Find out the prettiest dazied plot we can,
And make him with our pikes and partisans
A grave. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
2. [From parti, French.] An adherent to a faction.
Some of these partisans concluded, the government had hired men to be bound and pinnioned. Addison.
I would be glad any partisan would help me to a tolerable reason, that, because Clodius and Curio agree with me in a few singular notions, I must blindly follow them in all. Swift.
3. The commander of a party.
4. A commander's leading staff. Ainsworth.
PARTITION. n. f. [partition, Fr. partitio, Latin.]
1. The act of dividing; a state of being divided.
We grew together,
Like to a double cherry, seeming parted,
But yet an union in partition. Shakefp.
2. Division; separation; distinction.
We have, in this respect, our churches divided by certain partition, although not to many in number as theirs. Hooker.
Can we not
Partition make with spectacles to precious Twixt fair and foul? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That ev'n our corn shall seem as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition. Shakefp.
The day, month and year, measured by them, are used as standard measures, as likely others arbitrarily deduced from them by partition or collection. Holder on Time.
3. Part
